Dulles Sees Anti-Stalin Feeling High

The opposition to Stalin among the Russian people must have been far stronger than the West had dared to hope, judging by the current anti-Stalin campaign.

This was the opinion given by Allen W. Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, in a talk before 600 members and guests of the Los Angeles World Affairs Council last night.

In his talk at the Statler, the brother of the Secretary of State said there were two main reasons for the current policy—the failure of Stalin's international policy and the unification of the free world against Communism.

"The leaders of the Soviet Union today are walking a dangerous tightrope," Dulles said.

"They are trying to discredit Stalin without discrediting the Communist Party, which he led so long, or the men who worked with him."

Dulles, 63, has headed the CIA since 1953. He was introduced at the meeting by Paul G. Hoffman, former ECA administrator. Dulles flew here especially for the council meeting.
